New Woodman Point to Henderson Foreshore Path a Benefit for All

Cockburn City Council has been successful in obtaining funding from the Department of Planning and Infrastructure's BikeWest program for the construction of a $680,000 shared path from Woodman Point to the Henderson Foreshore.

The path will provide a unique experience to its users as it meanders through our beautiful coastal, ridge, lake and wetland environments. The experience of all of these unique environments along one trail will not only provide educational benefits but also tourism opportunities, said Mayor Stephen Lee, pictured here with Cockburn MLA Fran Logan.

This project will serve both local and regional needs. It will be used as a recreational path by the locals as well as visitors, plus it will be providing a healthy and safe commute for workers at the Australian Marine Complex.

The path will be constructed to a standard that will allow use by cyclist, jogger, walkers and wheelchairs, explained Mayor Lee.

BikeWest, Department of Conservation and Land Management, Main Roads WA and the City will provide funding towards the $680,000 project.

The funding for the project is shared as follows:

City of Cockburn	$220,000 (over 2 years)
Main Roads WA	$25,000
CALM	$325,000 (over 2 years)
BikeWest	$110,000 (over 2 years)

The shared path will connect with the existing foreshore path at Woodman Point to the Henderson Foreshore via Lake Coogee. The project is due to be completed by mid 2005, with works already commenced within the Beeliar Regional Park for the southern section of the path.

Davilak Trail Rediscovered

What is 1.5 km long, suitable for all walkers, includes three lookouts, and provides panoramic views of the coastline? The answer is the Davilak Walk Trail. Few people could answer this question and yet many visitors to Manning Park have passed the entry point on numerous occasions.

The Davilak Walk Trail is located on the limestone ridge at Manning Park, Hamilton Hill, with the entry point located right next to the Azelia Ley Homestead museum.

The trail was constructed in 1988 to celebrate Australia's bicentennial, but due to neglect and vandalism it has become overgrown and eroded in parts, to the extent that few people would recognize it. To remedy this problem Council committed $40,000 to the repair of the Davilak Trail. To achieve this the Environment Management Section utilised the Australian Conservation Volunteers to undertake the work. The work involved pruning scrubs, relaying crushed limestone, repairing stairs and removing rubbish. The Australian Conservation Volunteers did a great job and completed the works on the 20 February, 2004. The improvement to the path is self evident as Environmental officers Ben & Paddy (pictured above) found as they walked the trail.

Unfortunately, the path is already under attack with inappropriate users destroying the freshly laid limestone. This includes 4x4 vehicles, trail bikes, mountain bikes and even horses! The Environmental Management Section is endeavouring to secure the path through the use of a number of heavy-duty gates and other devices. Council staff also need the help of the community in stopping people destroying the path and endangering walkers. Anyone spotting any of these illegal activities along the Davilak Trail should contact the Council Rangers immediately on 9411 3444. Please make a note of any vehicle license plate number or other identifying features. Rangers can impound offending off road vehicles for 3 to 12 months.

For further information please contact Environmental Officer Paddy Strano on 9411 3448.

PORT COOGEE MARINA

20 Years on Council Still

Supports a Marina for Cockburn

On March 16, 2004, your Council made one of the most important decisions for the future of our city it has ever made. At this meeting, Council voted to amend our Town Planning Scheme and adopt the structure plan for Port Coogee.

The idea for a marina along the former industrial coast north of Coogee Beach has been around for the last 20 years. Over 10 years have gone into the planning and public consultation for Port Coogee alone. In December last year, I announced in Cockburn Soundings that the structure plan and town planning scheme amendment for Port Coogee was open for public comment and I urged you to take part in this important process. Over 4,000 of you took up this opportunity.

By the time the public submission period had closed Council had received 4,030 submissions. Fifty percent expressed support for the project, 49% objected to part or all of the project and the remainder gave comments neither supporting nor objecting to the development.

One matter is clear from the public submissions, the vast majority of you wanted some kind of clean up and development of our coastline. I believe the decision your Councillors and myself have made will satisfy the majority who support Port Coogee while taking into account the concerns raised by others. In our decision, Council made a number of changes to the development, including:

- Creation of a 200m beach and 10,400 sqm (1.4Ha) of associated swimming area within the marina;

- Additional 7,687 sqm of public open space area;
- 28 fewer residential lots within the marina, a reduction of 15%;
- An additional 39 public boat pens, an increase of 14.8%;
- The inclusion of an additional transit stop located near the marina village, and the retention of the main north east transit station; and
- An increase in the marina village of 14,700 sqm (1.47Ha) to include retail/commercial and residential development.

The plan pictured here includes some of these features.

With over 20 additional conditions placed on the developer, Council's decision shows the great deal of consideration Councillors have given this matter. I sincerely feel we have made the best decision for the City both now and in the future.

Port Coogee still has to gain the approval of the Western Australian Planning Commission. Once this is complete the Minister for Planning and Infrastructure will take the matter to Parliament. I am confident both the Minister and the WAPC will support the decision your Council has made, and to all of you who made submissions, many thanks for your valuable input.

THINK BIG Act Small

The idea of reducing greenhouse emission in the household is not new, but applying this in practice has always been the challenge. This is where Southern Metropolitan Regional Council (SMRC) has tackled the challenge through an innovative program called Green Houses. The project was funded by SMRC member Councils, which includes the City of Cockburn, as well as funding from the Sustainable Energy Development Office's Grants Committee.

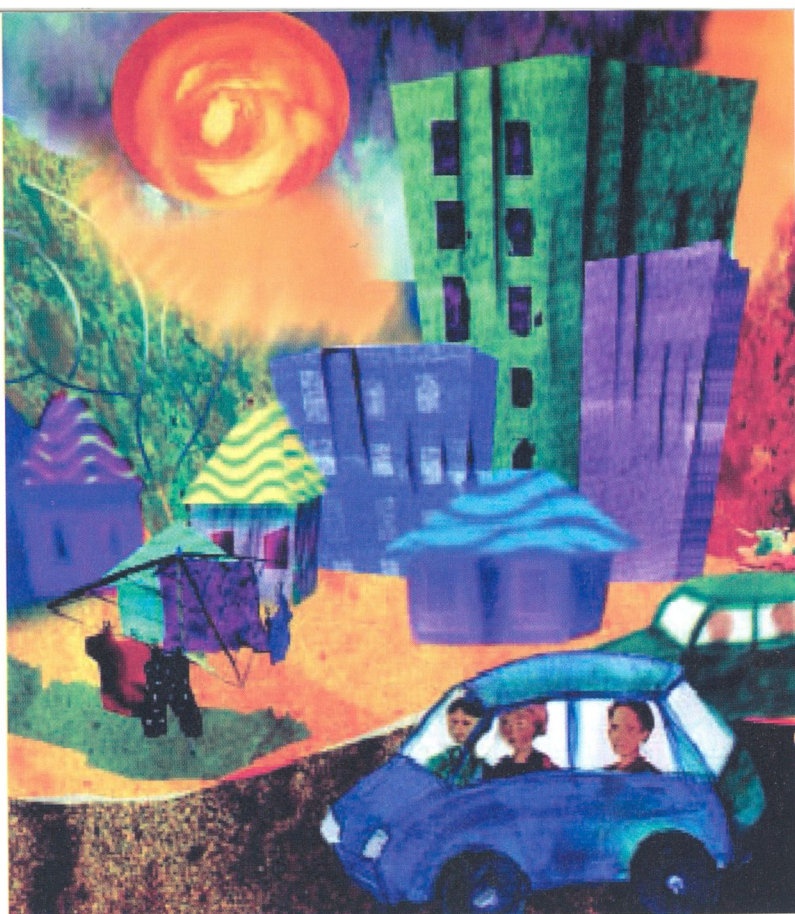

In one of the first ever projects to measure householders' transition to energy efficiency, 100 households have averted over 37 tonnes of greenhouse gas emissions in 3 months through easy, low cost actions.

The Green Houses pilot project was run over the last 10 months and focused on how people use their appliances and live in their homes. The SMRC project was implemented in collaboration with Murdoch University and the Towns of East Fremantle and Kwinana, both SMRC Member Councils.

Residents had the choice of attending an evening workshop or accessing a personalised website. Householders set energy goals for the home, online or at the workshops, ranging from switching to wiser use of air conditioners to cold-water clothes washing.

"The project has attracted renters and homeowners and all income brackets showing behaviour is something we all can change," said Kim Holland, SMRC Green Houses Project Officer.

Since the workshops, held 12 weeks ago, residents participating in a regional pilot project have saved themselves on average $80 per house per year, making a real difference to their energy bills and their environmental impact.

"Participants have expressed their sense of empowerment to tackle this global issue with others in the community," said Dr Stephanie Jennings, SMRC Regional Greenhouse Coordinator.

The pilot project provided a foundation for a regional program to help reverse the trend of rising home energy use and greenhouse emissions. The success of the project has led to the decision to run the Green House program in the City of Cockburn in the near future. So watch this space.

“Don’t be an April Fool! Change Your Smoke Alarm Battery”

Smoke alarm batteries should be changed annually and the Fire and Emergency Services Authority has designated April Fool’s Day as Change Your Smoke Alarm Battery Day.

Terry Shehan, a Station Officer at Success Fire Station, is encouraging all householders to maintain smoke alarms by taking the advice of the campaign and changing smoke alarm batteries.

Smoke alarms are lifesavers in the home and it is vital that they are maintained to ensure they operate effectively, Terry said.

The best way to guarantee that smoke alarms work properly is to replace batteries once a year with long lasting alkaline batteries.

Everyone needs to be prepared for the threat of house fires and residents living in the City of Cockburn are no exception. In the last financial year there were over 30 residential fires in the City and this should be a warning to people to be vigilant about protecting their families and homes.

Smoke alarms are proven to be early warning devices to help save lives and property from fire. If residents don’t already have smoke alarms, FESA recommends that they consider installing the mains powered type of smoke alarms.

Our community’s firefighters are always ready to respond in times of need, but the warning that a smoke alarm gives is invaluable when it comes to saving lives. That is why it is important for community members to take action. Don’t be a fool, change your smoke alarm battery on April Fool’s Day.

The “Don’t be a Fool! Change Your Smoke Alarm Battery in April” Campaign is proudly supported by Duracell.

PIT BULLS Subject of Recent Court Case

Council has successfully prosecuted three owners of three dogs, two of which were Pit Bull Terriers, commonly referred to as Pit Bulls, with fines and charges amounting to $8453 imposed by the Magistrate. The owners pleaded guilty to the multiple offences under the Dog Act in relation to dog attack, dog wandering, unregistered dog and a variety of charges under the Restricted Breed Legislation in relation to the Pit Bulls not wearing the prescribed collars and being in a secure place with signage, wandering off a lead unmuzzled, as well as a charge for the Council not being notified of change of premises where the one pit bull was kept. The three dogs concerned in the dog attacks, which resulted in the death of a cat and dog, were all surrendered to Council Rangers and put down.

The Magistrate remarked that he could not believe that these dogs are still allowed in the country and he also stated that he believed that people who didn’t take responsibility in relation to the ownership of these dogs and complied with legislation shouldn’t own such a dog.

Cockburn has approximately 80 pit bull and pit bull crosses registered with Council. The care and control of the majority of these dogs is a credit to their owners. However a few owners are still not taking responsibility and are ignoring the legislation. Council has a further three prosecutions pending one of which is in relation to a Pit Bull Terrier dog.

Residents of Cockburn may know that Cockburn Sound was named after
Admiral Sir
George Cockburn,
but who was he?

George Cockburn, the second son of Sir James Cockburn, was born in London in 1772. He entered the Royal Navy in his ninth year.

Captain Cockburn was one of a number of able officers who served under Admiral Nelson in various engagements against the French and Spanish in the Mediterranean during the 1790s. Admiral Nelson was happy to leave Cockburn to carry out the tasks of blockading Italian ports because, we so exactly think alike on points of service. Cockburn wrote of Nelson, next to my own father, I know of none whose company I so much wish to be in or who I have such real reason to respect.

After serving with Nelson, Cockburn was promoted to Rear-Admiral and went on to take an important part in the Anglo-American War of 1812. He showed his skill as a naval commander in operations on the Chesapeake, Sassafras, and Potomac rivers in the United States. He co-operated with General Ross at the Battles of Bladensburg and Baltimore. During the Battle of Baltimore, Cockburn's flagship attacked Fort M'Henry. This attack inspired American lawyer

Francis Scott Key, who was on board the flagship to negotiate a prisoner release, to write the The Star-Spangled Banner, which became the United States national anthem.

After the attack on Baltimore, Cockburn commanded a detachment of Royal Marines that burnt several public buildings in Washington D.C. One of the government buildings burnt by Cockburn's marines was the American President's official mansion.

The Americans painted the building white to cover up the damage and it became forever known as the White House.

Early in 1815, Cockburn received the order of the Bath, and in the autumn of the same year he conveyed Napoleon to exile on St. Helena on board the Northumberland.

Cockburn was promoted to the rank of vice-admiral in 1819, and to that of admiral in 1837; he became First Sea Lord in 1841. In this office he was an important figure in the Royal Navy's early adoption of steam-power.

Captain James Stirling named Cockburn Sound after

Sir George Cockburn in 1827.

In 1851 he was made admiral of the fleet, and in 1852 inherited the family baronetcy from his elder brother. Admiral Sir George Cockburn died in 1853.

The portrait shown here was painted by Sir William Beechey in 1820 and depicts Cockburn in his vice-admiral's full-dress uniform with the ribbon and star of the Grand Cross of Bath. On the table to the left is his hat behind some books and papers. He is wearing a sword which was presented to him by Admiral Nelson in 1797. His right hand holds a pair of kid gloves and rests on a map showing Cockburn Land, Baffin Island.
