Message from the Mayor

As we leave our homes each day to engage in a myriad of activities we give little if any thought to the dangers that present themselves on our pathways, cycle ways and roads.

The media bring the news of daily incidents that result in trauma that can be of a minor nature through to life threatening injuries, and in some cases, death. There would be very few, if anyone, not directly or indirectly affected in some way during their lifetime from these outcomes.

The State Government applies a range of law enforcement measures, vehicle safety standards are constantly improving and our paramedics and health services offer world class treatment.

So what can each and every individual bring to the table?

- Respect for themselves as individuals
- Respect for their families
- Respect for their friends
- Respect for the community they live in
- Respect for the communities they visit on their travels.

Preventative initiatives that every individual can use include:

- Focus on what you are doing whether it be walking, cycling or driving
- Be alert to preventative action you can take
- Report paths, cycle ways or roads that are damaged
- Plan your journey including stops for longer journeys; share the driving, stay within the posted speed limit and driving to prevailing weather conditions
- Avoid distractions like mobile phones and ear phones while walking, cycling or driving
- Avoid alcohol and drugs.

Your contribution to improving safety on our pathways, cycle ways and roads will make a difference and be valued by other users.

The responsibility starts with each individual; it cannot be transferred to others or ignored. So the next time you leave your home have due regard for yourself and others – life is short enough without bringing it to a premature end.

Get your laughter on

Side Splitter returns to Memorial Hall this October with a show that will have you thinking you're at a world-class comedy festival.

Be prepared to sit through shows that will have you gasping with laughter by international, national and local comedians doing what they do best... cracking you up.

This year's line-up welcomes Fiona O'Loughlin! Well-known on the comedy circuit and the headline act for Melbourne Comedy Festival and Edinburgh Fringe Festival, Fiona has brought many a house down in fits of laughter. She's an author and TV personality including a recent appearance on 'I'm a Celebrity Get Me Out of Here'. Laughs are guaranteed.

If that's not enough, prepare yourself for stitches with Aussie favourite, Heath Franklin, or as most would know his alter-ego, Chopper. No doubt there will be a few hand-to-mouth gasping moments but all in the name of laughter of course. We don't call it a 15+ event for nothing.

You may have seen this young Triple J presenter and up and coming comedian on Channel 9's 'Talkin' Bout Your Generation', if not, check out Ciaran Lyons as he brings his 'faux pas' jokes to life.

And would it really be a Side Splitter Comedy Festival if we didn't have at least one musical comedian? Open the curtains for Steve Hughes, Aussie-born thrash metal drummer, comedian and actor. Steve brings his heavy metal comedy to Memorial Hall in a fashion only he could pull off.

This is a 15 and over event, anyone under the age of 15 must be accompanied by an adult or guardian. Doors open from 6pm to late.

Side Splitter takes place over two consecutive Friday and Saturday nights, 11 and 12 October and 18 and 19 October. Tickets and show details available from sidesplitter.com.au

Calling all growers, and local food lovers!

The Grow It Local Festival is happening 4-10 November and we are calling on growers, crowdfarmers and local food lovers to get involved and curate a contribution at growitlocal.com

Crowdfarming is a great way to get freshly cultivated produce straight from a local farmer to your plate whether at home or your favourite restaurant and Grow It Local is the perfect event to promote this wholesome activity.

Community members and groups, restaurants and local businesses are invited to host an event, activity or experience. This might involve hosting an 'introduction to growing' class in your backyard, pickling 101 in your restaurant, a tour and taste from your patch, a composting workshop at a local community garden, jam or passata making, or a crowd-farmed dinner using produce sourced from Grow It Local's network of local growers. Celebrate your love for growing local, fresh produce and showcase your sustainability and community ideals. Events and experiences can be ticketed or free.

'At its heart Grow It Local is an idea to inspire more people to grow, share and eat locally grown food,' said cofounder, Darryl Nichols.

'We believe that if everyone grew their own food we'd be happier and healthier. We'd have dirtier nails and bigger smiles.'

We'd compost more and waste less. Life would be juicier and more delicious!

Here are some of the events happening during the festival:

2-10 November

Host a community picnic with your neighbours and the City of Cockburn will provide you with either a veggie box, fruit box or salad box

9 November

Cooby Swap and Share at Coolbellup Hub. You can swap or share home-grown or made foods, seedlings and more, from 10am.

City of Cockburn is the first WA council to jump on board and is a proud Grow It Local partner. We hope you dig it! Get involved at growitlocal.com

L-R Coogee Common and Bread in Common General Manager, chef Scott Brannigan and gardener Jack Olsen

Coogee Common's uncommon offerings already a hit with diners

Every passionate cook knows the real value of fresh produce to the flavour of a finished dish, and you can't get much fresher than fruit and veg grown in your own backyard.

Spearwood was famous for fresh produce early last century and this tradition has been revived on the footprint of a former market garden surrounding the old Coogee Hotel.

Coogee Common is the brainchild of owners restaurateur Nic Trimboli and developer Adrian Fini who are responsible for Fremantle's eternally popular Bread in Common. The refurbished and reinvigorated 118-year-old hotel will open its doors to diners in late February 2020, but its sprawling kitchen garden has already earned its keep.

It has been supplying fresh vegetables, herbs and fruit for daily Bread in Common menus since last September and will become the main produce source for the Coogee eatery when it opens.

Coogee Common and Bread in Common General Manager, chef Scott Brannigan, who established the Coogee garden 12 months ago, works with gardener Jack Olsen to strategise plantings around seasonal menus.

At the time of this interview in winter, the garden was brimming with artichoke, cauliflower, baby carrots, kale, spigarello, rhubarb, kolrabi, fennel, radish, beetroot, beans and sweet potato, including many heirloom varieties.

Following the removal of rocky topsoil, the 1.5ha sloping site was terraced and filled with friable material to complement the legendary 'Spearwood red' soil, and then shielded from the often fierce Fremantle Doctor with Geraldton wax and rosemary hedges.

Its bountiful produce graces every Bread in Common diner's plate with a hero item whether it be vegetable, herb or fruit grown just down the road at the old hotel site.

Brannigan and Olsen are now focused on the garden's purpose for the coming warmer months tending perennials like pomegranate, dragon fruit, citrus, passionfruit, grapes and herbs plus an abundance of melon, zucchini, squash, tomatoes and peppers that will feature on Coogee Common menus when the hotel comes full circle to reopen as a local gathering place around late February 2020.

What drives you on a day to day basis?

I have found that my abilities as a leader and role model come very naturally to me, so too, I strive to achieve my best to complement the role modelling.

What people in your life have had the most influence on you?

I'm fortunate in regards to having a super supportive family that has always supported and pushed me to achieve my best. But my role models have always been the most significant influence on me from Michael Kesavan who I volunteer beside at the youth centre to teachers at school, and I am grateful to have had these people influence me.

What would you say to other young people to get them involved in the Cockburn Youth Centre?

If you are interested in participating with any of the programs, come down and participate. Yes, you will be anxious at first as I was, but soon you will grow and become part of the Youth Services community, and if you are doing the tabletop games at least, you already have a friendly face to greet you when you turn up.

Cockburn Youth Centre

You never know who you are going to meet at the Cockburn Youth Centre. Recently we caught up with Corey...

Can you tell me about yourself?

I'm a regular at Cockburn Youth Centre and volunteer my time to assist with running tabletop game programs. I'm also a full-time student at Murdoch University, studying a double degree in criminology and forensic science.

What have you accomplished so far that you are proud of?

My biggest accomplishment happened last year when I became the inaugural Head Boy of Fremantle College, but I am also proud of the fact I have made it into university. Another opportunity I am proud of is volunteering with the autism extension program at Fremantle College and running tabletop games with their year sevens to help develop their social skills.

RSL City of Cockburn Sub-Branch President Digger Cleak OAM, Treasurer & Membership Officer Kay Cleak OAM, and Ceremonial Advisor & Public Relations Officer Arthur Stanton with Cockburn Mayor Logan Howlett (2nd from right).

Cockburn RSL celebrates centenary with new help hub for veterans

This October, the RSL City of Cockburn Sub-Branch will celebrate 100 continuous years since the first Returned & Services League was established in the area, by launching a new Advocacy and Compensation Hub for veterans at its Hamilton Hill HQ.

Club President and RSL Australia life member, Digger Cleak OAM, said trained Advocacy and Compensation Officers would assist any Australian Defence Force veteran members with advice on pensions, compensation, health issues and access to emergency financial assistance, through the RSL Welfare Fund.

"In our 100th year, we will continue to lead the way into the future, to assist and aid our Australian Veterans," Mr Cleak said.

The RSL has a long history in Cockburn. The Returned Sailors and Soldiers Imperial League of Australia (RSSILA) Spearwood Sub-branch received its charter on 19 October, 1919, first meeting at the circa-1913 Methodist Church hall on Rockingham Road, Spearwood.

A second RSSILA sub-branch was established in 1954, in Hamilton Hill on the site of the current RSL hall, and the two were combined in 1970, becoming the Cockburn RSL Sub-branch and receiving its charter in March, 1973.

It was renamed the RSL City of Cockburn Sub-branch in July 2002, the same year a massive project to replace the old termite-infested hall on the lot donated by the Baker family back in 1954 began. The new hall opened on 26 March, 2003 featuring some of the original floorboards and stumps in the bar.

Today the sub-branch oversees five major annual events plus what is believed to be the state's only ANZAC youth parade and service.

Introduced by the sub-branch's RSL Ceremonial Advisor & Public Relations Officer, RSL Life Member Arthur Stanton, in 2002, it's held every April with around 1,500 students representing about 30 Cockburn and Fremantle schools.

The sub-branch will celebrate the centenary at a red carpet cocktail party on 19 October, where the new Hub will be opened by Minister for Veterans Issues, Willagee MLA Peter Tinley.

Blue paints an important message

City staff will paint logs blue at Bibra Lake to raise awareness about mental health and suicide prevention.

The Blue Tree Project aims to remind passers-by that it is ok to feel blue as well as encourages community members to check in with anyone they know who might be going through a rough time.

Awareness, prevention and early intervention are extremely important to reduce the stigma that often attaches itself to mental health; instead we want our community to know that it's ok and that help is out there.

Residents are invited to help paint, have a chat, seek resources and spread the message while enjoying a free coffee on Sunday 19 October, 9-10.30am Hope Road, Bibra Lake.

Turn up and be prepared to paint the town blue.
